Daikonshima

大根島

A small island,
a small adventure

*A small island, floating in the calm lake Nakaumi.
Time seems to flow slowly on this small island that can be circled in 30 minutes by car.
What started as a leisurely drive against the soothing breeze, suddenly became a breathtakingly beautiful view, filled with color and flowers.
I couldn't help but feel excited about what was to come.*

At the peony garden, I was welcomed by great blooming peonies.

Red, white, yellow, purple ...

I never knew peonies came in so many colors.

I enjoyed a stroll through an elegant garden, and took a quick break at a cafe.

I kept driving so that I might meet more peonies.

Daikonshima boasts the highest production of this beautiful flower which colors the island.

The peony, a symbol of both Matsue City and Shimane Prefecture, was first brought to Yatsuka about 300 years ago, when a priest of Zenryu-ji Temple visited Mt. Akiha (in modern day Shizuoka Prefecture) and took peonies home for medicinal purposes and planted them in the temple grounds. Peony cultivation spread among local farmers and, around 1955, a new technique was developed where peony buds were transplanted into Chinese peony seedlings. Cultivation increased, and the wives of farmers began to travel around Japan to sell peony buds. Yatsuka's peonies are now exported overseas and are highly valued in places such as Europe, the United States, and Taiwan. From mid-April to early May, large colorful peony flowers with a diameter of 20-30cm beautifully bloom in a manner befitting the title "The King of Flowers." Farmers on Daikonshima also cultivate peonies which bloom in winter. "Winter-blooming peony" refers to peonies which typically only bloom in spring but are specially treated with artificial growth delay techniques so that they will bloom in winter. On the other hand, "Winter peony" is a two-season variety of peony that blooms in both spring and winter, though it has the peculiarity of not sprouting leaves in winter. Peonies have taken root as symbols of Daikonshima, with many local products made from them, such as flower-based dyes. There are many facilities on the island where visitors can view and even purchase peonies. In addition, the Daikonshima Peony Festival, held from mid-April to early May, is a popular event that attracts many tourists to see countless blooming peonies.

Peony dyeing

In 1991, 30 volunteers from Yatsuka began the "Peony Dyeing Study Group." They went to Kyoto for training and held their own study sessions, cultivated materials and dyes, and developed products dyed using peony flowers. In 2008, the company changed its name to "Daikonshima Dyeing Studio" and began selling peony-dyed products, for which it also obtained a trademark registration. Peony petals are picked at their best state, when the flower begins to bloom, and are turned into a natural dye.

Daikonshima Peony Festival

This event is held from mid-April to early May, when Daikonshima is decorated with countless peony flowers. Tourists flock to see stage events, such as performances from the surrounding area, and to eat from local food stalls.

Peony character "Dream Peony"

Peony Flower Competition

Flowers in their best condition, lovingly bloomed by growers, are exhibited and awards are given for outstanding peonies and new varieties.

1. Chinese Peony Garden

There are many varieties, such as the "Enmusubi" (matchmaking) or "Marimo" (moss ball) peonies with green petals, cultivated in Japan and derived from Chinese peonies. Chinese peonies bloom a little earlier than Japanese peonies, starting in early April.

Yuushien Agrifarm Co.,Ltd.

Producer of agricultural products, including Unshu Ginseng (ginseng produced in the Izumo region), peonies, and Daikonshima Buckwheat.

Home of the world-famous Unshu Ginseng.

Most of Yatsuka is farmland.

Ginseng has long been a specialty. Harvested six years after planting, ginseng dries fields of nutrients and a field must be left untouched for 15 years before ginseng can be grown there again.

The ginseng produced here is called "Unshu Ginseng" and is highly regarded in overseas markets as one of the world's finest ginseng products.

In Japan, it is mainly processed into powder or extract, and is widely used as a nourishing and tonic agent.

islanders were recruited to work in the fields.

Later, when the clan permitted private cultivation, the area used for planting ginseng expanded.

Although most of the cultivation areas that had spread across the country have disappeared, the Unshu Ginseng of Yatsuka is one of the three major producers of ginseng in Japan, along with the Shinshu Ginseng of Nagano Prefecture and the Aizu Ginseng of Fukushima Prefecture, and is the only producer in the prefecture.

History of Unshu Ginseng

The cultivation began during the Tempo period (1830-1844) when the Matsue Domain established ginseng farms under the direct control of the domain, and the

A mystery created by the earth; Understanding the formation of Daikonshima Island.

Daikonshiima is a flat island formed from basalt volcanic rocks from an eruption approximately 200,000 years ago.

Because basalt lava flows easily, the terrain of Daikonshima is gently sloping, like a plate lying face down.

The highest peak on the island, 42-meter-high Mt. Otsuka, is made of reddish-brown, pitted volcanic scoria. It was the location of the crater that formed Daikonshima and Eshima.

There are two lava tunnels on the island, which are designated as Natural Monuments.

A heart-shaped reef can be seen on the coastal side of Benten Island.

This is believed to be the result of wave erosion of a volcanic landform called a chumulus, which is a dome-shape caused by new lava entering a volcanic rock formation when the surface of the lava was solidified but the interior was not.

The den of a "Dragon God" birthed by volcanic activity

Daikonshima and Eshima are technically the same volcanic island, both created by an eruption 200,000 years ago. On Daikonshima, there are two lava tunnels, formed by lava flows, which have been designated National Natural Monuments. Daikonshima is in an area certified as a Japanese Geopark in December 2017, and the lava tunnels, scoria hill (Mt. Otsuka), and spring water (Hanyu Bay Water Park) are designated geological and geomorphological sites. Other features of the landscape such as spring water and basalt rocks tell the story of volcanic activity can also be seen throughout the island.

Nationally Designated Special Natural Monument Yukido

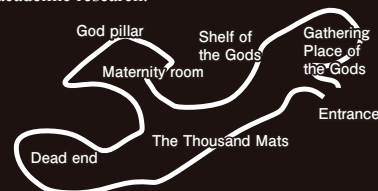

- 31 July 1931 Natural Monument designation
 - 29 March 1952 Special Natural Monument designation
- The entrance seems to have been a large cavity with a large gas pool, and there are traces of collapse due to gas escaping from the ceiling. Due to safety concerns, entry to the cave is prohibited except for academic research and other activities as approved by the Cultural Heritage Division.

Nationally Designated Natural Monument Ryukeido

- 7 June 1935 designation
- This lava tunnel was accidentally discovered in 1933 during road construction. Because of its unusual shape, it was named "Ryukeido" (Dragon Valley Cave) as if it were the abode of the Dragon God. The tunnels are home to some of the world's rarest cave creatures, with eyes lost to degeneration, who are currently the subject of academic research.

Volcanic Tunnel No. 2 (Ryukeido Cave) can be toured alongside the guidance geoguide. You are required to pay a geoguide tour fee (children of middle school age and under are free of charge). For those interested, please fill out the application form available through the QR code. [Point of Contact] Izumo Geoguide Group / izumo.geoguide@gmail.com Matsue City Cultural Properties Division (TEL: 0852-55-5523) (Weekdays 8:30-17:15) Please be aware that the volcanic tunnel is dark and slippery. There are flashlights and boots available onsite for use.

Shrines and temples.

Kannon-ji Temple (Hanyu)

It is believed that this temple is an offshoot of the Toda area's Iwakura-ji Temple and was originally called Soko-ji before changing name to Kannon-ji. The ceiling painting of the main hall is a must-see.

The shrines and temples on Daikonshima and Eshima are important storytellers of the islands' histories. You can unwind the history of Yatsuka by visiting these special sites.

Zenkei-ji Temple (Futago)

The place of worship of most of north Yatsuka. Known for its impressive main building.

Zenryu-ji Temple (Hanyu)

A temple with origins in the castle town of the now ruined Gassan Toda Castle. The original temple introduced peony cultivation to Daikonshima.

Tako Shrine (Eshima)

The same shrine is reportedly described in the Izumo-no-Kuni Fudoki chronology. Originally it was on Daikonshima (formerly Tako Island) but moved to Eshima (formerly Mukade Island). The lanterns made from volcanic rock are a highlight.

Sansha Shrine (Osое)

Hanyu-no-Kawa Spring
On Daikonshima Island, settlements were built around springs, which the islanders called "kawa" and used as a source of water for daily life. The "Hanyu-no-Kawa" Spring in the Hanyu area, is featured as one of Shimane's 100 famous water sources (springs, waterfalls and streams, etc.)
